

1901 Isle of Man Census: Was Manx to be heard in Douglas?¹

PAUL R LEWIN

The 1901 Census was the first to ask the ‘language question’ regarding the population of the Isle of Man. Basic statistics of the number of Manx speakers remaining were produced in the years following but it was to be 100 years before the details could be viewed.

Some more detailed analyses have been made of smaller parishes and villages of the Island, where Manx may be supposed to have remained longer, and individual known Manx native speakers, but there appears to have been no analysis of the census data from Douglas, a much larger and more complex population. Whereas, for example, Cregneash had a population of 92 in the 1901 census, occupying just over three pages of one district of Rushen civil parish, Douglas comprised 25 districts across two parishes; one district alone in lower Douglas had a population of over 1000.

This paper will follow the census enumerator through the streets of Douglas, seeking out those who were identified as Manx speakers in 1901, looking at their distribution in the town by location, age, occupation and birthplace.

I. Introduction

The Isle of Man is a self-governing British Crown Dependency with its own parliament, government and laws. The UK government, on behalf of the Crown, is ultimately responsible for its international relations. The British Sovereign, who is ‘Lord of Mann’, is the Manx Head of State and is represented on the Island by the Lieutenant-Governor (Isle of Man Government Website). Whilst this was essentially true in 1901, at that time the reserve powers kept by the UK authorities were considerable and the Lieutenant-Governor had a pivotal role as the Island’s sole executive and Chancellor of the Exchequer (Kermode 2000). The UK decennial census also included the Crown Dependencies and many British colonies (National Archives).

The Census taken on 31st March 1901 was the first to ask the ‘language question’ in the Isle of Man, which was added following a request to the Lieutenant-

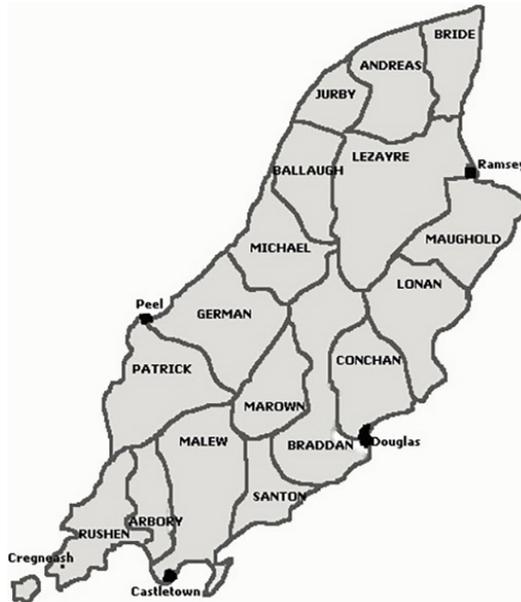

1 I would like to thank Dr Christopher Lewin for his helpful comments and advice on the drafts of this paper and the anonymous peer reviewers for their suggestions.

Governor by the recently formed Manx Language Society (Miller 2016: 13; Manx Sun 17 Nov. 1900). It seems that this request followed encouragement from the wider Celtic community as it is described as ‘a striking example of inter-Celtic co-operation’ in the Pan-Celtic monthly magazine Celtia which goes on to say that ‘it was taken at the suggestion of the Celtic Association and carried out through the instrumentality of its Manx representatives’ (Celtia 1 Jun. 1901). Enumeration of Irish speakers in Ireland and Gaelic speakers in Scotland had been included in the census since 1851 and 1881 respectively (Parry & Williams 1999: 1).

The 1891 census in Wales asked the language question for the first time and it was this same format that was adopted for the Isle of Man in 1901. The question was simply ‘language spoken’ and the expected answers were English, Manx or Both. The enumerators were specifically instructed to exclude children under 3 years of age (Norris 2016).

Basic statistics of the number of Manx speakers, according to the answers to this question, were published before the end of May 1901 in the Manx Sun newspaper by A W Moore, Speaker of the House of Keys (the directly elected branch of Tynwald, the Isle of Man parliament), who was one of the representatives of the Manx Language Society who had made the request to the Lieutenant-Governor the previous November (Manx Sun 25 May 1901) and presented to the Pan-Celtic Congress held in Dublin in August that year (Peel City Guardian 31 Aug. 1901).

The official statistics were then published in 1903 (HMSO 1903) but it would be 100 years before the details could be studied, the records being closed for this period under census legislation. Some more detailed analyses have been made of smaller parishes and villages of the Island, Ballaugh (Miller 2016), Lezayre and Kirk Michael (Wheeler 2017, 2018) and areas where Manx may be supposed to have remained longer such as Cregneash, ‘a village where Manx and English were both linguistic realities and furthermore a nucleated settlement’ (Miller 2007), and individual known Manx native speakers (Broderick 2018), but there appears to have been no analysis of the census data from the whole of Douglas.

This is a much larger and more complex population. Whereas, for example, Cregneash had a population of ninety-two in the 1901 census, occupying just over three pages of one district of Rushen civil parish, Douglas comprised twenty-five districts across two civil parishes (twenty-four in Conchan and one in Braddan). Over 35% of the Island population lived in the town in 1901 (HMSO 1903) comprising people who had come to Douglas from rural communities across the Island, where we may imagine the Manx language was more prevalent, as well as those born in the town. By now the major port on the Island with over 351,000 holiday-makers arriving in 1900 (Kniveton et al. 1996: 9), Douglas inhabitants may be expected to have had greater contact with English speakers than their rural counterparts.

Douglas was also expanding rapidly at the end of the nineteenth century and determining accurately the boundary is difficult. It seems to have been a problem for the enumerators too, as some entries in a district otherwise entirely outside the town show. Against three entries in district three of Conchan civil parish the enumerator has written ‘now in Douglas Town’. In this study I have only included those districts where the enumerator’s description includes ‘3. Town Douglas’. Two other districts of Conchan include streets now in the town of Douglas but not described as such in the 1901 census and so have been excluded. Descriptions of the included districts are shown in Table 1 and those excluded are shown in Tables 2 and 3.

This gives a total population of 19,164, slightly lower than the official figure of 19,223 (HMSO 1903: 18). The total number who answered ‘both’ to the language question in these districts is also less than that reported in 1903: 800 vs 855. If we were to include the extra districts, we could get near to the official figure with a total of 850 but the total population would then be 21,103 - greater than the official figure. I cannot explain the discrepancy but as I can find no trace at all of the twenty-three monolingual Manx speakers reported in the official figures for Douglas; nor have the twenty-seven in Ramsey been found (Wheeler 2018) it seems the figures ‘reported to both houses of parliament at his Majesty’s command’ (HMSO 1903) in 1903 were not entirely accurate.

My approach to this research was to use the census browsing facility on the Ancestry® platform (Ancestry.com 2005). Ancestry® is useful for family history research, allowing searching of its index of transcriptions but on drilling down to a specific census and year it also allows viewing of the entire district images, at the beginning of which is a description of the census district. Checking the descriptions on the census enumerators' forms for each district of the civil parishes of Conchan and Braddan, which are known to be the parishes in which the town of Douglas developed, I selected those districts where 'Town – Douglas' was specified. Each page image was then studied to ascertain the numbers of 'Manx' or 'Both' in the Language column, infants under three, blank rows, empty houses and description (e.g. street names) on that page. These details were recorded against the parish, district and page number. Full details of any entries for 'Both' (no 'Manx' entries were found) or 'do' (ditto) under 'Both' were then recorded and are shown in the appendix to this paper. The number of English speakers was calculated by subtraction from thirty-one, the maximum number of entries on a page (taking into account the small number where two entries were squeezed onto one row).

From this information it is possible to analyse the distribution of Manx speakers (according to the census), across the town, age groups, households, occupations and birthplace.

2 A census reference has three main elements: a department (letter) code, a series number, and a piece number. The department code and series number for the 1901 census is RG13. The piece number follows this. Within each piece may be several enumerators' books for the various census districts and the pages within each are numbered. For Conchan districts 1-5 are divided into two books one for outside Douglas and the other for Douglas town. In the Ancestry.com classification these have been assigned 'a' and 'b' respectively. '1b' is unique as part of this book is in Braddan parish and the other in Conchan. (National Archives)

2. Results and Discussion

2.1 Distribution across the town

Douglas began as a small fishing village with houses clustered along the riverbank (Kniveton et al. 1996: 5) from which it grew to cover a much larger area by 1901. We might imagine that the Manx speakers identified in the 1901 census were the last remnant of that small population around the harbour. However, the census shows that this was not the case. The oldest areas of the town have some of the lowest numbers and percentages of Manx speakers found in the town.

Children under 3 were excluded from the count of Manx or English speakers. The number of Both is shown as a percentage of the sum of Both and English (excluding under 3yr-olds) and of the total population

It will be seen from the map that the census districts were not a uniform size, so it is better to compare percentages than actual numbers. This does not, however, alter the position of the harbour area districts. Only one district (16) has a lower number and percentage of Manx speakers. This is the Loch Promenade area where the population was swollen by many English and Irish hotel staff. The district with the highest percentage (>9%) of Manx speakers is actually that with the smallest population (district 14). This is, however, adjacent to the other districts with the highest percentages of Manx Speakers (districts 9,10,12 and 18 all with more than 6%). If we combine the figures for these districts, we find an average 6.76% of the population of this area of the town spoke Manx according to the census. The average across the town was just over 4%.

This area was the centre of the expanding town though it had spread far beyond this by 1901 and the outer, more affluent, areas have lower percentages of Manx speakers. However, there was no area of the town without some who claimed to speak Manx.

2.2 Distribution by age group

If we look at the ages of the Manx speakers, as reported in the census, we again see a broad distribution from 9 to 91 years old. The distribution peaks with those born in the two decades between 1832 and 1851. This is broadly the same as was found in Kirk Michael (Wheeler 2017) though in Douglas there were more born in the latter decade. The census for Cregneash showed a slightly later peak between 1842 and 1861 (Miller 2007). The overall Douglas distribution is also broader than these other areas, which may simply be a reflection of the larger population.

This contrasts with the age distribution of the overall Douglas population, where more than half were under 30 years of age in 1901.

Consequently, when seen as a percentage of the overall population in each age band, a far larger proportion of those born in the first four decades of the 19th century are recorded as Manx speakers than in the younger age groups.

Yet there are some young Manx speakers. 61 of those recorded as speaking both Manx and English were under 30 years in 1901; 7.6% of the total number. If we just look at those born in Douglas, the under thirties comprise 18% of the total.

Fourteen of those under thirty are recorded in a family group with a Manx-speaking parent or parents – a total of 7 families. Eight are described as the head of their household (including one household with two heads who are single sisters) of whom half have a spouse speaking English only. There are seven Manx-speaking young wives, four of whom have English only husbands.

Eight were domestic servants in English-speaking households, the youngest being 14 years old. Henry Jenner quoted the Rector of Kirk Andreas in the 1870s as saying '[s]ervants like to keep it up as a class language not understood by their masters' (Jenner 1876: 190). Four domestic young staff at Noble's Hospital (two housemaids and two kitchen maids) spoke Manx. Only one of the eight nurses recorded as resident on census night was bilingual, 24-year-old Agnes Callister from Malew. There were five Manx-speaking patients in the hospital that night, who might have appreciated a friendly word in their mother tongue from nurse Callister.

Four of our young people were the only Manx speakers in an otherwise English-speaking household. One of these is easily explained. 27-year-old confectioner, John J Kneen, living with his English only mother and younger brother in Melbourne Street has been described as one of the outstanding Manx scholars of his generation, whose writings in Manx in the Isle of Man Examiner in 1897 led to the founding of the Manx Language Society (Woolley 2006).

Two of the others, 25-year-old Kate Kaighen and 27-year-old architect Sam Lomas, had a similar family situation to John J Kneen, living with an English only widowed mother. We cannot tell whether their deceased fathers had spoken Manx or if there were other family influences.

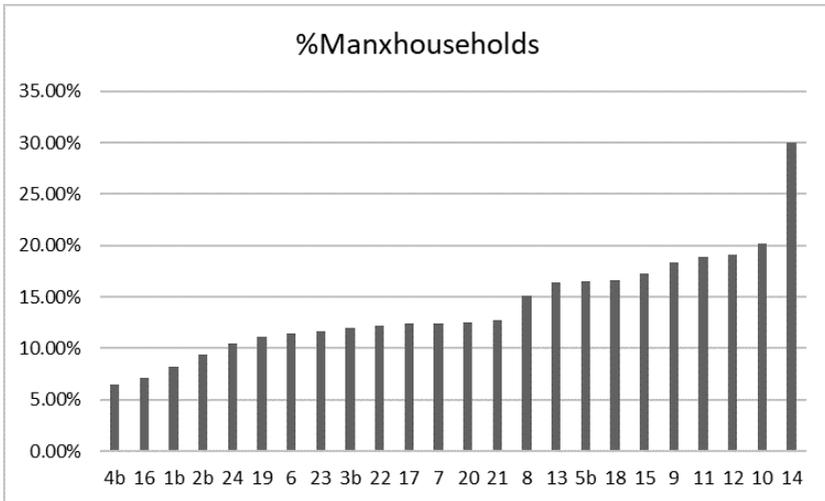

Living in Tynwald Street was 15-year-old Elizabeth A Kewley, who is more difficult to explain given her younger age and the fact that she is living with both her parents (father born in Patrick and mother from England) and five siblings, all of whom spoke English only. In the previous census she is also recorded as living with her parents, but we cannot tell if there were any other nearby family members who spoke Manx. The census form clearly states ‘Both’ against her name under ‘English’ and two ‘do’ for the previous entries and ‘English’ for the next entry. The most likely error in this situation would be an adjacent entry but as the entry above was her mother, born in St Helens in England, it is unlikely, though not impossible, that she was the Manx speaker. There are no other Manx speakers recorded in any of the five families living in that house. Whilst Tynwald Street had the largest number (17) of Manx Speakers of all the streets in Douglas, there were no other young Manx speakers recorded there.

2.3 Distribution by households

Census data were collected on individual household schedules, which were then transcribed onto the enumerators’ sheets we can see today. As each household schedule was given a number, we can also see the distribution of households containing one or more Manx speakers. In Douglas some buildings contained several separate households, as we see with the above example from Tynwald Street.

A study of Lezayre parish (Wheeler 2018) found that while only one in ten individuals was a Manx speaker in 1901, almost one third of households contained one or more Manx speakers. In Douglas we have seen that the overall percentage of Manx speakers was just over 4% yet almost 14% of households contained at least one Manx speaker (596 out of 4262 households). The distribution of these households across the districts broadly mirrors that of the individual Manx speakers.

Most of these households (448) contained only one Manx speaker. Of these, 28 were widows/widowers living either completely alone or as a separate household in an otherwise English-speaking house. A further 8 were living in a building where another household contained a Manx speaker. Of the 24 unmarried individuals recorded as Manx speakers, 12 were either completely alone or in an otherwise entirely English-speaking building.

In 98 of the families only the husband spoke Manx and in 67 only the wife. 41 Manx-speaking couples had only English-speaking children, mostly adults, living with them. However, there were 14 families where more than one generation spoke Manx.

The largest family of Manx speakers recorded in Douglas was that of Thomas (62-year-old mariner) and Catherine (52) Callow, living at 7 Empress Drive. With them were their 5 daughters, 25-year-old Catherine, Elizabeth (24), Esther (22) and 19-year-old twins Florence and Maude. Also in the household was 29-year-old Mason William Radcliffe, who is described as a relative. All are recorded as speaking Manx and English. In the 1911 census the remaining members of the household at that address (father and 3 daughters) were all described as English only speakers.

The next largest Manx-speaking household in 1901 Douglas was the Corris family of 5 Stanley Terrace. The phenomenon of transmission failure within families has been noted in other studies of language decline (Dorian 1986; Broderick 2018) and we can see this in the Corris family. Philip, a 47-year-old butcher, and his wife Catherine (also 47) had six children living at home in 1901. The eldest four sons, William (24), Percy (22) (both general labourers), 20-year-old clerk Edward and 16-year-old office boy Alfred all spoke Manx along with their parents. Their two younger siblings, 10-year-old Mona and 5-year-old Thomas were recorded as English speakers. They also had a 2-year-old who is excluded from the census language question. By 1911 only the parents are recorded as Manx speakers.

Further examples of this split between older offspring speaking Manx and their younger English only siblings can be seen in the Christian family of Hatfield Grove and the Teares of Bucks Road.

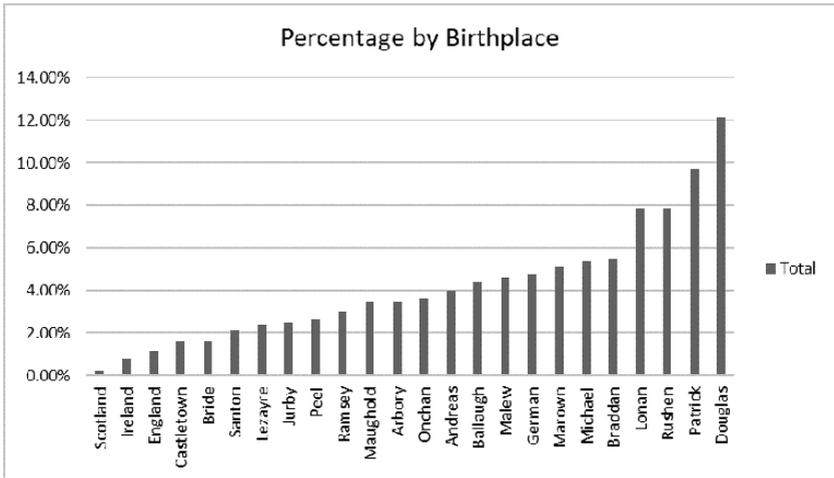

Manx-speaking Joseph (aged 56) and Eleanor (51) Christian had six children living with them at 9 Hatfield Grove. 23-year-old Frances, a saleswoman, and her brother Robert (a 17-year-old joiner) spoke Manx but their younger siblings, aged between 15 and 9, are recorded as speaking English only.

At 120 Bucks Road 66-year-olds William and Margaret Teare and William's 78-year-old aunt Ann Craine spoke Manx along with their 26-year-old daughter Amy. However, Amy's 20-year-old sister spoke only English.

2.4 Distribution by birthplace

The growing town had attracted people from all over the Island, presumably hoping for a more prosperous life. The census tells us where people were born, so we can look at the origins of our Manx-speaking population.

We can see here that the Manx speakers of Douglas came from every parish on the Island and further afield, though 12% were born in Douglas. Of the 88% born outside the town, the three highest parishes were Rushen, Patrick and Lonan, which were the largest country parishes and also contained some of the areas Jenner had described as the ‘Manxest’ (Jenner 1876). A small number of Manx speakers were not born on the Island. Nine were born in England, six in Ireland and two in Scotland. There were also seventeen Manx speakers with children born in England, indicating they must have lived off the Island at some time in their lives and yet retained their Manx. The Scottish couple were the Postmaster of the Isle of Man and his wife, Alexander and Marjorie Fraser, living in Brunswick Road. Uniquely in their case the entry in the Language Spoken column is enclosed in quotation marks. We can only speculate regarding the significance of this. Alexander Fraser was a native of Inverness, who had left Scotland to pursue a career in the Post Office, having been postmaster at Jarrow, Gosport and Gravesend before being appointed to head the Post Office in the Isle of Man in October 1898. He moved to Northern Ireland shortly after the 1901 census and a dinner, held in his honour, was reported in the local newspapers (Isle of Man Times 27 Apr.1901). There is no mention in this report of his having learnt Manx and it seems unlikely that he would have had the opportunity to do so. Perhaps the unusual entry in the census indicates that they were Scottish Gaelic speakers.

2.5 Distribution by occupation

The Census recorded the stated occupation of each person. Of our 800 Manx speakers, 278 have no occupation stated, 42 are retired and 73 are described as ‘living on own means’. This leaves 407 with a stated active occupation. There are 167 descriptions for the occupations of these 407 Manx speakers.

In the official census report (HMSO 1903) occupations are classified according to type in detail for the whole Island (ibid. Table 12) and in a summary table for Douglas and the remainder of the Island (ibid. Table 15). I have attempted to classify the stated active occupations of Manx speakers according to this system to allow comparison with the official figures for the whole population.

Occupations are classified into twenty-two groups, each with several sub-groups. There were Manx speakers recorded in most of the groups in the Douglas population.

Figure 9 Manx Speakers as a Proportion of Top 10 Occupation Groups in Douglas

Whilst in the overall population of Douglas Domestic Indoor Service (IV 2) is the largest group, this is the fifth largest amongst the Manx speakers. This group included those in hotels as well as private households. The Manx-speaking indoor domestic servants were almost exclusively employed in either the latter or the hospital. As described above, the district with the lowest percentage of Manx speakers included Loch Promenade with an English-speaking population augmented by English or Irish born hotel and boarding house staff.

In the Manx-speaking population the largest occupation group was General Labourers (XXII 4a), which is fourth largest in the overall population. The next largest group was lodging/boarding house keepers (XX 2). This is perhaps surprising as they may be expected to have been most exposed to the influence of English from their visitors, but we must remember that amongst the boarders and lodgers in the town were those who had come from the country districts to find work, many of whom were Manx speakers. Next, we have those in a group which includes all the building trades, who are the second largest group overall. Following this group are those involved in manufacture and supply of food and drink, indoor domestic servants and other types of service (e.g. those involved in washing services). The next group is of those involved in conveyance by sea, a group which would be larger than represented here as some of its members would be at sea on census night and enumerated separately on their vessel. Following this group are those involved in conveyance by road. The last two of the top ten occupations amongst Manx speakers were subsets of the 'Dress' group. XIX 2 included dressmakers and milliners, whilst XIX 3 were the boot and shoe makers. Tailors were a separate group within XIX and were just outside the top ten in 11th place.

In 1842 a letter to the Manx Sun (Manx Sun, 6 Aug. 1842), mainly concerned with the need for Manx-speaking clergy, made the statement that it was still considered necessary to employ staff conversant with Manx in the principal shops of Douglas. Whilst the population of the town by 1901 was undoubtedly mainly English-speaking, there still was a sizeable minority who may have felt more comfortable transacting their business in Manx than English. It can be seen here that a wide range of 'customer facing' occupations had Manx-speaking practitioners. Manx speakers may still have been able buy food, drink and clothing or obtain other essential services in their mother tongue in 1901. It has also been suggested that Manx may have continued to be used as a workplace language even if no longer the language of the home (Broderick 2018). This may have been the case amongst the general labourers and those in the building trades in the above groups.

In addition to these groups there were a number of individual occupations with only one representative. It is notable that the occupations of Manx speakers represent a wide range of social class. In the aforementioned groups there are employers and labourers. Amongst the individuals we have an architect, an accountant, a music teacher, a lamplighter, a street musician and a stone quarryman.

2.6 How reliable is the information in the census?

We can see a number of interesting indicators regarding the state of Manx in 1901 from the census data but can we rely on this information to draw any firm conclusions?

There are two matters which need to be considered here.

1. The Question itself.
2. Transcription errors in the enumerators' forms.

2.6.1 Does this question tell us what we want to know?

One of the criticisms of the census at the time concerned the very nature of the question, 'language spoken'. In the Isle of Man Examiner of 13th April 1901 at the foot of a regular Manx language column was a letter published anonymously from a 'lady who is much interested in the Manx Revival' (thought to be Sophia Morrison). In it she raises the issue that she had met fluent Manx speakers who answered this question with 'English' because, 'although they could spake (sic) it better till English they had no one to spake it to' (cf. Miller 2007: 109–110).

This begs the question; to whom did the elderly widows who answered 'both' and yet were living alone in otherwise English-speaking houses or living with English-speaking family speak it? Perhaps they had friends nearby with whom they conversed in the mother tongue or maybe they transacted their business preferentially in Manx in establishments where Manx speakers worked. Possibly this was why some workers with those occupations still said they spoke Manx.

Choice of newspaper may also have influenced answers to this question. The Manx Sun published the following exhortation on the day of the census.

THE Census forms are now in the hands of our readers. One of the columns to be filled up is headed 'Manx Language.' The greatest possible care should be taken that a full return of Manx speakers is made. It is not at all necessary for a person to be as fluent in Manx as in English in order to return himself as a Manx speaker, nor is it necessary to have a reading and writing knowledge of the language. Sensible people need not be told that in doubtful cases the language should get the benefit of the doubt. We would point out to the people the importance of giving a full and accurate return of Manx speakers. (Manx Sun 30 Mar. 1901)

No other newspaper appears to have been so encouraging.

Answers to the question, therefore, do not tell us how many of the population still knew Manx or could read or write it, only those who spoke the language were sought and 'language spoken' could be interpreted as either ability or habitual practice. Even clarifying this point may not be sufficient. It has been suggested that the number of those who could speak Gaelic was under-estimated in certain areas by the 1881 Scottish Census, by the inclusion of the word 'habitually' in the question (MacKinnon 1990). The latest (2021) Isle of Man census asked whether one could speak, read or write in Manx but not how often or to what level of proficiency. In Ireland the questions ask how well one speaks Irish, how often and whether within or outside the education system (Central Statistics Office).

There were also some known supporters of the language in the census for Douglas who did not identify as speakers. We have already seen that John J Kneen is recorded as 'Both' but A W Moore and Rev. Canon Savage, who were both part of the delegation from The Manx Language Society that resulted in the addition of the Language Question to the census, are recorded as English speakers.

Moore had learned Manx Gaelic as a young man from his godfather, 'Parson' Drury, Vicar of Braddan (Fyson 2009: 99) and was a founder and first president of the Manx Language Society in 1899 (Kelly 2006: 315). It seems strange that he should be recorded as only speaking English in the census. Does this tell us something about his interpretation of the question and its purpose? In his biography, Fyson likens his skill in speaking Manx to others of his class with similar skills in Latin or French, whilst the language of the household was English (Fyson 2009: 105).

The Manx Sun reported in 1900 that the son of Canon Savage (then a student at Cambridge and not at home on census night 1901) was a fluent speaker of Manx largely through the efforts of his father (Manx Sun 17 Nov. 1900) and yet Canon Savage does not claim to speak it in the census. Two servants in the Savage household did speak Manx, according to the census, one a nurse for his children, who was also employed there in 1891. As she had been employed in that capacity, maybe she also had an influence on the son?

Was there any evidence that those who answered 'Both' actually spoke Manx? In most cases we have not been left with any record of the Manx-speaking abilities of these people. Two of them, however, did make public use of the language; William Kneen (Missionary) and George Watterson (Stationmaster). William Kneen from Andreas was the missionary at the Douglas Town and Seamen's Mission (The Bethel). On 3rd July 1897 he preached a sermon in Manx and English, which was subsequently produced as a pamphlet, a copy of which exists in the Manx National Heritage archives (Kneen 1897). He organised Manx classes in the Bethel from 1898 (Isle of Man Times 8 Oct. 1898) and each year he either preached in Manx or sang a solo in Manx at the Christmas Oie'll Voirrey service (Isle of Man Times 2 January 1897). George Watterson from Rushen was the stationmaster at Douglas in 1901. He had previously been stationmaster at Peel where, in 1893, he seconded, in Manx, a vote of thanks following a lecture by the Manx poet T. E. Brown, which was recorded in the local press (Isle of Man Times 31 Jan. 1893).

2.6.2 Transcription errors on the enumerators' forms

We do not have access to the original household schedules as these were destroyed once the details had been copied into the enumerators books so we cannot see the householders' own statements. All we have are the transcriptions made by the enumerators for each district. There is evidence of errors in the completion of these forms which suggests that there may also be errors in the recording of the numbers of Manx speakers.

The instructions at the head of the Language Spoken column state 'children under 3 years of age to be excluded'. In some cases, the language column is left blank or contains a dash for an infant under 3 but there are many examples where English has been written and then crossed out and there are examples where ‘English’, ‘Eng’ or ‘do’ has been written and left in place. If we look in detail at the portion of Braddan Parish District 1 which is within the Douglas town boundary (covering South Quay and Douglas Head) we find the following.

Number of Infants under 3 years (7 weeks – 2 years)	85
Number of blanks in Language Spoken column	46
Number where English/Eng subsequently crossed out	33
Number where English/Eng not crossed out	6

The large proportion where English has been written and subsequently crossed out (38%) and the fact that these are not all at the older end of the age range (the youngest is 11 weeks) suggest that these should be regarded as transcription errors. When transcribing onto a form, as these enumerators were doing, and under pressure, it is tempting to fill each column vertically as this seems quicker. In doing so, if one assumes the contents will always be the same, this is copied down the column and the odd one which is different is missed. In this case the majority were English so this or ‘do’ was copied down the column and individuals corrected later but sometimes not corrected at all.

These apparent errors are not specific to certain enumerators or consistent across individual districts. They occur across all the census districts examined and there is variability within a district and even the same page. If we look at page 30 of this district, we start with four children of the Reynolds family living at 19 Head Road, aged between 11 years and 5 years, who are all recorded as speaking English. The next two entries are their younger siblings aged 2 years and 3 Months, also recorded as English but subsequently crossed out. Further down the page we have the entry for the 1-year-old of the Johnson family, living next door, whose Language Spoken entry has been, correctly, left blank.

Could there be errors in recording the number of Manx speakers? We have no standard with which to compare these, unlike the situation with age and the instruction to exclude under 3-year-olds, but we can see some examples where English has been written and then corrected.

On page 8 of Conchan Parish District 8, it appears that every row of the Language Spoken column has been filled in as English and then amended later. As well as the English-speaking infants, we have the following for adults.

John Merrifield	English written, crossed out and Both written above
Maria Merrifield	English written, crossed out and Both written above

Edward Quayle	English written and altered to Both
Thomas Quayle	English written and altered to Both
Elizabeth Collings	English written, crossed out and Both written above
Mary Oates	English written, altered to Both crossed out and English written above
Ann Quirk	English written and altered to Both

It does not seem unreasonable to assume that there may be some individuals recorded as English on the enumerators' sheets when their household schedules actually stated 'Both'.

3 Conclusions

Although the main language spoken in Douglas in 1901 was undoubtedly English, the census indicates that just over 4% of the population claimed to also speak Manx. This was not limited to a few old people in a particular part of the town but spread across all areas, a wide range of ages and occupations.

However, the answer to the title of this paper (Was Manx to be heard in Douglas?) is a different matter. When the Rev. Ernest Savage was seeking evidence for the continued existence of Manx monolinguals in the 1880s, one of his correspondents commented that 'the Manx, who nearly all speak English fluently, speak nothing but English when there is any chance of strangers overhearing them' (Miller 2015: 185). An example was given in the report to the Pan-Celtic Congress in Dublin; 'on some of the Peel fishing luggers, with their crew of six men and a boy, from the time of leaving the harbour to the time they return next morning, every order as to trimming the sails, or steering the boat, or shooting the nets, will be given in Manx, and not a word of English heard throughout; but on the quay these same men, in the hearing of others, will speak only English' (Peel City Guardian 31 Aug. 1901). Consequently, whilst Manx may still have been spoken about the town in 1901, the casual stranger would have been unlikely to hear it.

Nevertheless, the numbers were seen as a cause for celebration by those concerned about the demise of the language. A W Moore, in his early publication of statistics to the editor of the Manx Sun (Manx Sun 25 May 1901), states that the total number 'is probably much in excess of what would have been expected'. Celtia concluded their report of the census with 'the figures have put new heart into the Manx Gaels and another drop into the Anglo-Saxon's cup of bitterness' (Celtia 1 Jun. 1901).

Because of the nature of the question asked and the possible transcription errors in the enumerators' records we have, the exact number of those who could still speak Manx in Douglas in 1901 may be more or may be less than we can see in the census.

Concerns about the nature of census language questions and enumerator interpretation of household returns have been raised in other Celtic nations. The original 1881 question regarding whether Scottish Gaelic was ‘habitually spoken’ was changed in 1891 to whether one could speak Gaelic alone or Gaelic and English (MacKinnon 1990). Following the 1891 census in Wales, Welsh MPs voiced concerns in the House of Commons: ‘Lloyd George was especially angered by the decision of enumerators at Machynlleth to substitute the word “Both” for “Welsh only” in the case of 284 persons’ (Parry & Williams 1999: 7).

It can also be seen that going back, as far as we can, to the original records may yield different figures to those presented in official summary tables. In studying the town of Douglas uncertainty around the position of the town boundary at the time of the census may partly explain this but in the case of the 1901 census we have only the enumerators’ books into which the information from the householders’ schedules was transcribed. From the 1911 census the original householders’ statements are preserved, which allows us to see how they actually answered the question.

Further research in this area could usefully examine the 1901 enumerators’ returns for the remainder of the Island, most of which has not been studied in detail. This would allow a better understanding of the answers given for the language question across the entire population (apart from those off-island on census night) and enable a full search for the 59 monolinguals reported in the official figures (HMSO 1903: 18). A similar approach to the 1911 census should also be undertaken to attempt comparison with the 1901 situation.
