

STUDIA ORIENTALIA
PUBLISHED BY THE FINNISH ORIENTAL SOCIETY
104

Democracy, Participation, and Deliberation in China

The Discussion in the Official Chinese Press, 1978–1981

by
Taru Salmenkari

HELSINKI 2006

Taru Salmenkari
Democracy, Participation, and Deliberation in China. The Discussion in the Official Chinese Press, 1978–1981

Studia Orientalia, Vol. 104. 2006.

Copyright © 2006 by the Finnish Oriental Society,
Societas Orientalis Fennica,
c/o Institute for Asian and African Studies
P.O.Box 59 (Unioninkatu 38 B)
00014 University of Helsinki
FINLAND

Editorial Board:

Jaakko Hämeen-Anttila (Arabic and Islamic Studies)

Tapani Harviainen (Semitic Studies)

Arvi Hurskainen (African Studies)

Juha Janhunen (Altaic and East Asian Studies)

Juha Laulainen (Publication Secretary)

Kaj Öhrnberg (Librarian)

Heikki Palva (Arabic Linguistics)

Asko Parpola (South Asian Studies)

Simo Parpola (Assyriology)

Rein Raud (Japanese Studies)

ISSN 0039-3282

ISBN 951-9380-68-X

Vammalan kirjapaino Oy

Vammala 2006

CONTENTS

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

PART I: METHODOLOGICAL CHAPTERS

Research Question and Methodology	1
The Historical Context of the Discussion	51
Political Discussion in 1978–1981 China	71

PART II: EMPIRICAL CHAPTERS

Democratic Centralism: Underlining Impotence of Democracy for the Socialist System	123
Anarchism: Defining Limits for Socialist Democracy	157
Bureaucratism	185
The Paris Commune: The Paragon of Socialist Democracy	223

PART III: THEORETICAL CHAPTERS

Theoretical Implications of Democratic Centralism	261
Democratic Centralism in Western Political Terminology	323
Democratic Centralism as Participatory Democracy	381
Democratic Centralism, Deliberation, and Consensus	429

PART IV: DIALOGUE WITH WESTERN RESEARCH

Evidence of Democratic Centralism	487
Democratic Centralism, Political Institutions, and Democratization	555
Democratic Centralism, and the Limits and Strengths of the State	629

BIBLIOGRAPHY	709
--------------------	-----

APPENDIX	i–xviii
----------------	---------

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This research has been made possible by many persons and institutions. Firstly, I must thank all those that have provided for my subsistence, for a longer or shorter period, during the years that this study took. These include CIMO, the Nordic Institute of Asian Studies, and an exchange program between the University of Helsinki and Peking University as grant providers and the Institute of Asian and African Studies at the University of Helsinki as my employer.

Secondly, there are several background conditions contributing to this study. I am indebted to all of my families for the support for learning and studying during various periods of my life. Likewise, I must thank all my longhaired, music-loving friends who helped me relax after days of exhaustive work during three years of library work in Shanghai. My colleagues at the Institute of Asian and African Studies and in the Asia-Pacific Studies program have been supportive, although sometimes even too eager to see the completion of this research. Fortunately there was the Coffee Room too where I was able to vent unnecessary pressure. Naturally, Chinese language skills are an ability without which this study would have been impossible, and the responsibility of learning them does not rely on my own efforts only but also on my teachers Tian Shanji and Wang Zhiwu's.

Thirdly, I must thank those whose input has concretely affected the content of this study. I want to thank my interviewees for their contribution and Jin Guanyao for helping me in practical arrangements in Shanghai. I received useful comments from Børge Bakken, Kyösti Pekonen, Stein Tønneson, and Jørgen Delman. I need to thank Steven Angle and Susan Ogden for their kind evaluations. Proof-readers deserve a mention too. Librarians at the Fudan University and Shanghai Library provided their assistance in finding and copying my newspaper sources, which is a good enough reason to note that without them and their flexibility this study would not have succeeded.

